“ I'd have loved to have seen you one last time. It was my plan to come Saturday, but you left us on Wednesday. I remember when we met as children, I was a young kid, you were a teenager and I thought you were so cool. You could perform skateboard tricks, and freestyle on your bike. You had unique gifts and talents that most others didn't. There was also something else, you were soft spoken, and never imposed your needs on others. You obviously had them, our Father's attention being one of them. All of those years of wishing, and through death, he's yours again. I imagine him holding his arms open to you as you ran into his warm embrace. You get to meet our youngest brother too, which is pretty cool. I can see the three of you in my mind's eye, playing catch, laughing, flying kites, fishing, or whatever it is we do with an eternity of no tears. I also think about how the veil of confusion and uncertainty from schizophrenia, and traumatic brain injury has been lifted from you now. And everything you didn't understand is as clear as the clear blue sky. There's comfort in knowing that. I wish we had known each other all these years, and been the siblings we could have been. I'm grateful to have been reunited with you before you left this earth, even if only for a little while. Cancer had already taken its toll on your body, and you were physically frail, but string in character; a rare quality in this world we live in. You had two of the greatest parents, Vicki, and Don, and two really cool sisters, Hiedi and Jess, & they love you so much. I pray for them. As they grieve, & miss you with all of their hearts. We will see you again brother. All my love.

Your Little Sister,

“ I am very sorry for your loss. I never got to meet David as I planned. When Jeremiah and Jackie came to visit, it was a plan. Unfortunately this never happened. I know I would have loved him.
